MUSIC WORTH TALKING ABOUT

String Trio Opus 45 (1946)

Arnold Schoenberg (1874–1951)

This 12-tone Trio unfolds as a single movement in three sections.

The first section functions as an exposition, the second as a sort of development, and the last as a shortened recapitulation and coda. The first two of these parts are further divided into two sections each. Color and timbre are of the utmost importance in the Trio; in addition to normal bowing, Schoenberg draws upon an extensive palette of playing techniques, including ponticello, pizzicato, harmonics, and col legno.

Kenneth P Gurney poet

Kenneth P Gurney grew up in the Chicago suburbs, then made his career living adjacent to national parks so he could explore the wild or history offered within the park. He came to writing poetry after 20 years of painting and print making as a visual artist. Currently he lives in Albuquerque, NM, USA with his beloved Dianne. On the second Tuesday of each month, Kenneth emcees the Adobe Walls poetry open mic held at Page One Books. Kenneth's poems have appeared in many diverse publications in the USA, England, Canada, Australia, Romania and Sweden. His latest book, an ebook, The Circuitous Route of Gravity will be available this spring. To learn more visit kpgurney.me
